

The Denver Post

denverpost.com

August 11, 2007

Related WestPac going green

Related WestPac last week unveiled details of the sustainability initiatives it will use to create a cleaner, greener environment throughout the redevelopment of Snowmass Village.

The firm will partner with the Rocky Mountain Institute to pursue the solutions, which include participating in the new Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) for Neighborhood Development pilot program and pursuing LEED certification for all buildings going forward.

It also will use cleaner construction practices and traffic-reduction initiatives to improve air quality and minimize environmental impacts; appoint a "sustainability specialist" to ensure sustainable design; and form a Sustainability Stewardship Committee.